6. Journals kept in Hyderabad, Kashmir, Sikkim, and Nepal. Edited, with Introductions, by his Son, Richard Carnac Temple. Maps and Illust. Lon., 1887, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The contents are varied: there is a 'private diary of politics at the court of the Nizam of Hyderabad;' there are journals of travel in Kashmir; and there are, finally, brief records of tours in Sikkim and the Eastern Himalayas. Each of these pieces is introduced by a useful essay from the pen of Sir Richard's son, Capt. Temple, of the Bengal Staff Corps. The 'journals' are all good, the most important by far being that first mentioned, which, indeed, forms more than three-fourths of the first volume."—Acad., xxxi. 443.

"We are not inclined to find fault, or to declare that his book is intellectually unnutritious, simply because here and there he has given us tinned geography when the carnal man might have preferred the fresh article. On the contrary, we do not know another English book which contains anything like so full or accurate an account of Sardinia, or, with the exception of Della Marmora's monumental tomes, of which Mr. Tennant seems to have made very little use, any foreign one worthy of being compared with it."—ROBERT BROWN: Acad., xxviii. 302.

Tennyson, Alfred, Baron Tennyson, D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., [ante, vol. iii., add.,] created a peer 1884. His position as the first of living poets still remains fixed; but his fame will no doubt rest chiefly on the works enumerated ante, vol. iii., although his later productions are all marked by the special characteristics of his genius. 1. The Window; or, The Songs of the Wrens: with Music by Arthur Sullivan, Lon., 1870, 4to. 2. Gareth and Lynette, [and The Last Tournament,] Lon., 1872, 12mo.

"The regret which may be justly felt at Mr. Tennyson's temporary abandonment of the metrical forms which delight the students of his earlier poems is faintly tempered by the inclusion in each of the Idyls of one short and finished lyric."—Sat. Rev., xxxiv. 568.

3. Idylls of the King, 1873, 2 vols. 8vo; 1874, 12mo. (This edition includes "Gareth and Lynette" and "The Last Tournament.")

"The fashion in which Mr. Tennyson has wrought the legends into a form suited to his purpose is a masterpiece of ingenuity. To attain a success of this kind is within the range of powers much less than his. There is, however, a way of doing commonplace work which elevates it into art."—Ath., No. 2348.

4. Queen Mary: a Drama, 1875–77, 12mo.

"Despite the many beauties which could hardly be absent in any work of Mr. Tennyson, the whole effect of 'Queen Mary' is disappointing, and the impression which it leaves upon the reader's mind is one of a dreary and bitter harshness."—Sat. Rev., xl. 19.

"It would be difficult . . . to adduce any sound reason for Mr. Tennyson's introducing so withered a leaf among the green leaves of his chaplet."—Ath., No. 2488.

5. Harold: a Drama, 1877, fp. 8vo.

"The poet has again fallen into what must be called the mistake of confounding the dramatic expression of tragic emotion with the mere relation of gloomy events."—Sat. Rev., xliii. 21.

6. The Lover's Tale, 1879, 12mo. (Written about 1828, and printed in 1833, but withdrawn from the press; subsequently "pirated" from imperfect proofs, and now published, with a third part, not previously printed, and a fourth, which had been published in 1869 under the title of "The Golden Supper.")

"The whole tone of the poem is pitched in that high key which the Elizabethan dramatists loved to select for their queens and tragedy-lovers. There is a fine extravagance about it, and its pages are flushed with that purple radiance whose fading is the first sign to us that we are no longer young."—E. W. GOSSE: Acad., xv. 489.

7. Ballads, and other Poems, 1880, 12mo. (Includes "Rizpah," "The Northern Cobbler," "The Defence of Lucknow," "The Voyage of Maeldune," &c.)

"The realistic element which gives so much of its force to Mr. Tennyson's genius is better represented in this little volume than the idealism which has hitherto been at least as powerful and at least as large a constituent of his greatest work."—Spectator, liii. 1624.

"In one of the poems of this volume Mr. Tennyson has, in our judgment, attained his highest reach as a poet dealing with the large issues of human life. It is called 'Rizpah;' and, although the heroine is an English peasant of the last century whose son had been gibbeted, the motif is identical with that of the beautiful Bible story. . . . It is impossible to read it without, as the poem goes on, being overwhelmed by a pity that is almost intolerable for the heroine of the poem. Having read it, it is impossible to recall it without a feeling of reverence for the great poet whose genius and deep heart called her into dramatic life."—Ath., No. 2771.

8. The Cup, and The Falcon, Lon., 1884, 12mo. (Two short dramas, which were acted, the first in 1881, and the second in 1882.)

"Despite several admirable passages of splendid rhetoric and glowing declamation, both 'The Cup' and 'The Falcon' are strangely deficient in vitality, in actuality, and in animation. It is unnecessary to add that they contain much poetic beauty, an exquisite felicity of language, and striking imagery."—Sat. Rev., lvii. 354.

9. Becket, Lon., 1884, p. 8vo.

"Though 'Becket' fails of the aim which its author would reach, it is a work which will sustain his fame as a writer of pure and nervous English, as a fine thinker, with a grand perception of what is noblest in character."—Sat. Rev., lviii. 757.

10. Tiresias, and other Poems, Lon., 1885, 12mo.

"One-half of 'Tiresias' is new; the other half was written, we believe, just fifty years ago. . . . Altogether the volume is laden with every kind of poetic wealth; but when it is considered that, with the exception of 'The Dead Prophet,' (written some twelve years ago,) 'Hands All Round,' and one-half of 'Tiresias,' these poems were composed during the last two or three years by a poet considerably over seventy years of age, it becomes a marvel of literature."—Ath., No. 3035.

11. Locksley Hall Sixty Years After, and The Promise of May, Lon., 1886, 12mo. (The "Promise of May" was acted in 1882.)

"The 'Locksley Hall' of to-day is not inferior in workmanship to the poem of forty years ago. There is the same ringing rhythm, the same strength and swing, the same ease and variety, that delighted our fathers."—Acad., xxxi. 1.

12. Demeter, and other Poems, Lon., 1890, 12mo. Of collective editions, later than those mentioned ante, vol. iii., the most complete are one in 8 vols. cr. 8vo, 1888, and another in 1 vol. cr. 8vo, 1890. An edition of his songs set to music by various composers, edited by W. G. Cusins, was published in London, 1880, 4to.

GENERAL CRITICISM:

"Despite superficial appearances to the contrary, Mr. Tennyson has more real variety of mood than any of his contemporaries, English or foreign. . . . It is astonishing that the man who wrote the 'Morte d'Arthur' and 'Ulysses' wrote also 'The Northern Farmer,' and that he wrote 'The Lotos-Eaters,' and again such a lyric as 'Tears, Idle Tears.' Who could have believed before the publication of 'The Northern Farmer' that the poet of 'Locksley Hall,' as he once used to be called, was all the while one of the first humourists that England can boast of? For it must always be remembered that the humour of 'The Northern Farmer' is the deep humour of truthful representation, and not the humour of satire, or whim, or caricature, and that consequently it is, though so small in quantity, to be placed in the same class as the humour of Cervantes, Shakspeare, Sterne, and the creator of Sir Roger de Coverley."—Ath., No. 2771.

"Whatever . . . is most truly characteristic of the culture and thought of the first Victorian period is impersonated in Lord Tennyson, and the posterity that may wish to learn the maturest judgment of the most refined circles in his day will find no sources of information comparable to his poems."—R. GARNETT, in The Reign of Queen Victoria, ii. 460.

We most cordially congratulate him on his present work, which is a monument of scholarly instinct and patient research."—ROBERT K. DOUGLAS: Acad., xxxii. 271.

"Professor de Lacouperie's data, which he admits to be 'of the most scanty description,' are altogether too meagre to support the elaborate systems he has constructed with them. . . . Kaffir Folk-Lore; or, A Selection from the Traditional Tales current among the People living on the Eastern Border of the Cape Colony, Lon., 1882, 8vo.

"The stories which Mr. Theal has collected during a residence of twenty years among the Kaffirs are very curious and interesting; and the information he gives, in his introduction and notes, about these wild people—among whom he has exercised many functions, including those of a mission teacher and a border magistrate—is most valuable."—Ath., No. 2861.

3. History of the Boers in South Africa; or, The Wanderings and Wars of the Emigrant Farmers, from their Leaving the Cape Colony to the Acknowledgment of their Independence by Great Britain, Lon., 1887, 8vo.

"He has resided long on the Cape frontier; he has collected numerous historical materials, both in South Africa and in Holland; and, at the instance of the Cape government, he has collated, arranged, and published all the authentic records of the Basuto tribe. . . . As one of the chief objects of his work is to present the conduct of the Boers towards the native race in a much more favourable light than other writers on the same subject have done, it is manifest that his views are calculated to excite criticism."—Ath., No. 3121.

4. History of South Africa, 1486–1691, Lon., 1888, 8vo; 2d ed. same year.

"Not only has Mr. Theal studied all the old Dutch records in the Cape archives, he has also visited the Hague and spent some months in examining the seventeenth-century manuscripts and maps that are collected there, with the result that his work will become invaluable to all students of South African history."—*Sat. Thomson, Sir Charles Wyville, LL.D., D.C.L., F.R.S., 1830–1882, b. at Bonsyde, Linlithgowshire, Scotland; was educated at Merchiston Castle School, and at Edinburgh University; became lecturer on botany at King's College, Aberdeen, in 1850; professor of natural history at Queen's College, Cork, 1853; professor of mineralogy and geology in Queen's College, Belfast, 1854; professor of natural history in the University of Edinburgh 1870, an appointment which he resigned in 1881. He took part in the dredging expeditions of the "Lightning" and "Porcupine" in 1868 and 1869, and in 1872 was appointed the scientific chief of the "Challenger" expedition; knighted 1876. The publication of the series of volumes giving the Report on the Scientific Results of the Voyage of the Challenger was begun, in 1880, under his superintendence, and has been continued under that of John Murray, F.R.S. Edin. 1. The Depths of the Sea: an Account of the General Results of the Dredging Cruises of H.M.Ss. "Porcupine" and "Lightning" during the Summers of 1868, 1869, and 1870: with Numerous Illustrations and Maps, Lon., 1873, 8vo; 2d ed. same year.

"The mastery which Professor Wyville Thomson shows over the results arrived at during this comparatively restricted series of explorations argues well for the harvest of knowledge to be reaped, we may hope, in the course of the more adequately equipped and more extensive survey over which he has now gone forth in supreme control."—Sat. Rev., xxxv. 353.

2. The Voyage of the "Challenger:" The Atlantic: a Preliminary Account of the General Results of the Exploring Voyage of H.M.S. "Challenger" during the Year 1873 and the Early Part of the Year 1876. Illust., Maps, &c. Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The two volumes now before us are an instalment of Sir Wyville Thomson's more comprehensive account, containing only 'The Atlantic,' the exploration of the Pacific and of the great southern basin being still to appear; and much more technical and thoroughly digested reports will one day be presented to the Admiralty, the preparation of which will require prolonged and elaborate study. . . . Nothing can surpass the beauty of the typography and general 'get-up' of these volumes, and the delicacy of the exquisite wood engravings from drawings by Mr. Wild, the extreme and conscientious accuracy of which cannot be doubted, exceeds anything of the kind which we have seen. The style is clear and unpretending, and sometimes rises into picturesque description."—Spectator, li. 253.

"It is not only a livre de luxe, beautifully printed, copiously illustrated, and handsomely bound, but it is by far the most comprehensive of the many biographies of the Bewicks, the memoir of the abler of the engravers being as nearly exhaustive as such a thing could be. . . . The bibliographical part of the book is practically complete. . . . The value of this volume is considerably enhanced by its century of illustrations, mostly produced from the original blocks, and in nearly all cases printed with wonderful success."—Ath., No. 2888.

2. The Life and Labours of Hablôt Knight Browne, ("Phiz.") Illust. Lon., 1884, 4to.

"The life of Hablôt Browne was a singularly uneventful and, except for his intercourse with Dickens, a very uninteresting one. But of this intercourse Mr. Thomson has been able to give us many delightful glimpses by the aid of hitherto unpublished letters and memoranda which passed between the two friends. . . . Of examples of Browne's facile management of the pencil and pen there are numerous reproductions scattered through the book."—Acad., xxvi. 310.

(The correctness of the form Hablôt, for Hablot, as well as of certain statements in the biography, is denied by Browne's nephew, A. S. Bickwell, in a letter to the Academy, xxvi. 401.)

Thomson, James, and Maclaren, James. The History of Dundee: being an Account of the Origin and Progress of the Burgh from the Earliest Period; &c., Dundee, 1874, 8vo.

Thomson, James, 1834–1882, b. at Port Glasgow, Scotland; lost both parents at an early age, and was brought up at the Caledonian Orphan Asylum. He entered the British army as regimental school-master, and was stationed for some time in Ireland, where he became engaged to a young girl, whose sudden death made a lasting impression in a life which appears to have been a peculiarly lonely and cheerless one. His first published poem, "A Loveless Bower," appeared in July, 1858, in Tait's Edinburgh Magazine, over the signature "Crepusculus." In his army life he made the acquaintance of Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, (q. v.,) then a private soldier, who in 1860 established the National Reformer, to which Thomson became a contributor. In 1862 he left the army and entered a solicitor's office in London, residing with Mr. Bradlaugh. In 1875 he seceded from the National Reformer and became a regular contributor to a periodical called Cope's Tobacco Plant. He suffered from depression and insomnia, and during his latter years gave way to habits of intemperance. His poems had already excited great admiration and obtained a high reputation through their publication in periodicals before any publisher could be found to bring them out in book form. 1. The City of Dreadful Night, and other Poems, Lon., 1880, p. 8vo.

"'The City of Dreadful Night' is, as may be readily apprehended, the abode of those who, seeing no hereafter, fret themselves at the prospect, or, rather, the lack of it. . . . It is exceedingly rare to find a volume in which so large a number of the pieces contained have a distinct and individual poetic attractiveness."—G. SAINTSBURY: Acad., xvii. 432.

2. Vane's Story, Weddah and Om-El-Bonain, and other Poems, Lon., 1880, p. 8vo.

"It is a pity that 'Vane's Story' stands first in Mr. Thomson's volume. We have only to turn to 'Weddah and Om-El-Bonain' to see what a true poet he is, after all. As a piece of solid, vigorous, and masculine narrative, it would be difficult to find its superior among the writings of contemporary poets."—Ath., No. 2775.

3. Essays and Phantasies, Lon., 1881, cr. 8vo.

"The poem on Shelley is a well-conceived invention for the purpose of symbolizing that poet's typical position, and, though not, on the whole, of high importance in point of writing or development, it has throughout a large measure of beauty. . . . Of the prose writings on Shelley the majority deserve some attention even now."—Ath., No. 3014.

"This is, on the whole, a pleasant book of travel. . . . Mr. Thomson is not a literary artist, so that the condensation and classifying which his materials needed have not been sufficiently done. . . . He went on his travels as a photographer. . . . If somewhat hindered in these ways from producing a book of high value, Mr. Thomson has given ample compensation in the pictures with which his books are most beautifully illustrated."—Spectator, xlviii. 506.

"His travels were an undoubted success; and his descriptions . . . will no doubt give an additional incentive to that spirit of geographical research which is one of the striking characteristics of our age."—Sat. Rev., lix. 483.

"To Mr. Thomson . . . belongs the credit of having first crossed the whole of Masai Land, from the foot of Kilimanjaro to Kavirondo, on the shores of the Victoria Nyanza. "The plan of the work is sound. The best authorities appear to have been laid under contribution; great assistance has been rendered by the subscribers and by private collectors of old prints and views, and many scarce maps and contemporary drawings are now for the first time submitted to the public. . . . "In considering the book as a whole, it is impossible not to be struck with the improvement it has undergone as its publication has proceeded. Ticknor, George, [ante, vol. iii., add.,] 1791–1871. Life, Letters, and Journals of George Ticknor, Bost., 1876, 2 vols. 8vo. (The first ten chapters of the work were prepared by G. S. Hillard, and the remainder by Mrs. and Miss Ticknor; but the bulk of it is mainly Mr. Ticknor's own writing.)

"Probably no American has led a life richer in that class of associations and interests which belong properly to literary biography, and the two volumes in which his history is told afford such varied literary entertainment, such pleasant personal anecdotes and reminiscences of so many of the most distinguished people of the time, as to form a substantial addition to the books on the shelf that holds the memoirs of Johnson, of Scott, of Mackintosh, and they may find a place, perhaps, close to the Life of Southey and the Diary of Crabb Robinson."—Nation, xxii. 148.

"The list of statesmen, of authors, and of persons of social and intellectual distinction, who are mentioned in Mr. Ticknor's journals and letters, would alone fill several pages of his book. Little account is given by his biographers of the personal qualities which seem to have secured for him universal esteem and good will. His letters uniformly display good sense and good feeling, but they contain no trace of a brilliancy which would perhaps not have contributed to his universal popularity. . . . In every capital of Europe he had not only acquaintances but friends, and at home he seems to have known every eminent contemporary. . . . Negative or receptive qualities have a value of their own if they are combined with intelligence, knowledge, and power of appreciation. . . .Sydney Smith's stories or Macaulay's monologues probably produced on Mr. Ticknor's mind exactly the proper impression. . . . Of the uprightness and soundness of his moral and political judgments his letters contain ample proof. In the series extending over more than fifty years there is neither a silly nor a humorous sentence, and there is scarcely an original remark; yet the collection is extremely interesting as a record of intercourse with conspicuous and celebrated persons."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 478.

"The two volumes are, no doubt, long, but they are so full of interest that we hardly know whether anything could have been spared. . . . On the whole, we are inclined to think that this is the very best book of its class that has ever come over to us from America."—Ath., No. 2530.

"We find little stories and remarks about hundreds of celebrated people in these two long volumes, but in hardly one case do we find that Mr. Ticknor really understood the nature of the person he was describing. Regarded as the experiences of a clear-sighted man, endowed with a marvellous faculty for work, this book possesses an interest of its own; but regarded in any way as a life, or as having any interest beyond that which arises from the number of celebrated people Mr. Ticknor met, (and with many of whom he was intimate,) the book is a failure."—Spectator, xlix. 1160.

Tincker, Miss Mary Agnes, b. 1833, at Ellsworth, Me.; became a convert to the Roman Catholic Church in 1863; acted as a nurse in a military hospital at Washington during the latter part of the civil war; resided in Italy 1873–87. She has contributed short stories, sketches, and serials to American magazines. 1. Grapes and Thorns; 4th ed., N. York, 1872, 8vo. 2. The House of Yorke: a Story of American Life, N. Signor Monaldini's Niece, ("No Name" Ser.,) Bost., 1879, 16mo; Lon., 1880, p. 8vo.

"'Signor Monaldini's Niece' is full of the charm of Rome. The author feels, and can reproduce, the loveliness of form and color which makes it an enchanted place: its glowing light, its soft air, its profuse succession of flowers, the steadfast beauty of the hills, the infinite variety of the Campagna, the power of its architecture, affecting the mind almost as the work of natural forces, the varied beauty and abundance of its fountains,—all these rise like visions before the reader who chances to be also a lover of Rome. Not only the wonderful city but its surroundings are familiar to this writer: the writhing olive-trees, the stately neglected buildings, the wide purple distance, the hill-sides steeped in varying light and shadow, are all used in the setting and background of the story. . . . The mise en scène being so good, what are the actors? . . . We take it to be the writer's intention to protest against the usual conventional restrictions on women's freedom of action, but elle s'y prend mal, and almost all her characters turn out as her opponents might desire. . . . We believe, from internal evidence, that this book is written by an American woman; it is very clever, but its atmosphere is rather what we expect in the work of certain clever Frenchmen."—Nation, xxviii. 187.

"It is throughout of unequal merit, but it abounds in admirable touches. . . . Perhaps the best that can be said of it is that it makes hackneyed scenes and situations interesting, and that Roman life, about which so many cartloads of folly have been written, is presented in it with exceptional liveliness and fidelity."—Sat. Rev., l. 122.

6. By the Tiber, Bost., 1881, 16mo.

"It is utterly formless. . . . Nevertheless there is a good deal of the power and much of the cleverness which marked 'Signor Monaldini's Niece' in 'By the Tiber.'"—Nation, xxxii. 410.

"From the first to the last page the book is full of imaginative fire. . . . The pictures of society at Rome are bright and humorous, the sketches of Italian scenery vivid and true, and there is a chapter describing the flight of Bruno after the murder of Vittorio which shows that power of conceiving situations and sensations completely removed from personal experience which is the severest test of the imaginative faculty."—COSMO MONKHOUSE: Acad., xx. 326.

"It confines itself entirely to a narration of proceedings in Rome and the neighbourhood; these are related in such a manner as to convey a great impression of reality."—Spectator, lv. 160.

7. The Jewel in the Lotos, Phila. and Lon., 1883, 12mo.

"There is really good work in this book, better even than the writer's clever tale, 'Signor Monaldini's Niece,' had led us to expect from her. The figures of the two girls in whom the interest of the story centres are brilliantly drawn, and represent with singular distinctness two very diverse types of womanhood."—Spectator, lvii. 349.

"Miss Tincker is an idealist who in these days of realism is not afraid to conceive according to the inspiration of her own poetic genius. . . . The novel is full of beautiful pictures."—Literary World, xiv. 455.

8. Aurora. Illust. Phila., 1885, 12mo.

"It is unique among the novels daily turned out by the press in being full of the local color of a locality not too familiar, and in being a story without a purpose, ideal rather than realistic, aiming at little but being a reproduction, at once faithful and picturesque, of life under picturesque conditions as it may still be lived and seen in Italy and Spain."—Critic, v. 16.

"These volumes do not appeal to a large circle of readers; but by those capable of appreciating them they will be found replete with interest. Probably no man in England is so qualified to do justice to the theme as Mr. Todhunter. He remarks that it is a task hitherto unattempted; for, 'although much has been published on the History of Astronomy, yet the progress of the mathematical development of the principle of attraction has been left almost untouched.'"—Ath., No. 2403.

"It makes us long for a time when the many fine mathematicians at Cambridge will cease to waste their intellects in devising 'tips' for their pupils, and will take to extending or reducing to order the vast mass of higher mathematics which already exists, but which is so neglected by us. Todhunter, John, b. 1839, in Dublin; educated at a Quaker school and apprenticed when sixteen to a firm of tea and sugar importers; entered Trinity College in 1862, and graduated in medicine in 1867; professor of English literature at Alexandra College, Dublin, 1870–74. He early abandoned the practice of medicine and devoted himself to literature, and since 1879 has resided in London. 1. Laurella, and other Poems, Lon., 1876, p. 8vo. 2. Alcestis: a Dramatic Poem, Lon., 1878, 12mo. 3. A Study of Shelley, Lon., 1880, p. 8vo.

"He is, above all things, an interpreter, and his object is to expound the philosophy which is, as it were, the body of Shelley's work, and which he believes, not altogether without reason, the poet himself considered a thing of much greater importance than the cunningly-wrought vesture of verse which has clothed it with immortality. . . . The portions of the book that are most useful and interesting are those which are devoted to analysis and exposition of the intellectual motifs of single poems."—Spectator, liv. 219.

4. Forest Songs, and other Poems, Lon., 1881, 12mo. 5. The True Tragedy of Rienzi, Tribune of Rome, Lon., 1882, 12mo.

"'The True Tragedy of Rienzi' is not one of those hybrid works of art, half poem, half play, and wholly neither play nor poem, which are known as closet dramas; in its production the requirements of the stage have evidently never been lost sight of, and every scene is busy with the quick movement which the stage demands. . . . The versification is strong, sinewy, and varied, full of fine Shaksperian suggestions; and the imagery has a large imaginative quality which is very refreshing."—JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE: Acad., xxi. 38.

6. Helena in Troas, [a drama,] Lon., 1886, 12mo.

"This poem, which has had, we understand, a remarkable success on the stage, is certainly fitted to give pleasure, if not equal pleasure, to the solitary reader."—Acad., xxix. 430.

With TOLLEMACHE, (BEATRIX,) HON. MRS. L. A., Safe Studies, Lon., 1885. Printed for private circulation.

"The bulk of the articles which form these two volumes appeared in the 'Fortnightly Review.' . . . Mr. Tollemache's name is best known by his advocacy of Euthanasia, and some of us can remember the storm of indignation that that article evoked. . . . Far pleasanter reading, and of more permanent interest, . . . are the biographical sketches."—Acad., xxvii. 22.

"All the facts that are known concerning Sterne's life are skilfully set before us by Mr. Traill, and are specially well dealt with in their possible influence upon him as a writer. . . . With all his faults, Sterne remains one of the world's greatest humourists; and the highest praise we can bestow upon Mr. Traill's book is that we think that it cannot fail to put him in a truer and more favourable light than that in which the public has hitherto seen him."—*Sat. "He is earnest, didactic, satirical, witty, but he is not a humourist."—Acad., xxv. 72.

"It is a book that plays with the great subjects of life, sometimes with more and sometimes with less of earnestness, sometimes with none at all, using a tone of levity. . . . There are dialogues in it which equal some of the best of Walter Savage Landor's in ability."—Spectator, lvii. 87.

5. Coleridge, ("English Men of Letters,") Lon., 1884, cr. 8vo.

"There is no ethical marivaudage about it, no fiddle-faddling with questions of motive and responsibility, no attempts to show that what would be disgraceful in a man of not-genius is interesting and attractive and almost respectable in a man of genius."—Sat. Rev., lviii. 601.

"It is impossible to feel that any passion of sympathy has animated Mr. Traill. There is some delight in Coleridge's marvellous genius as a critic, warm admiration of his poetry, strong disapproval of his weakness, and sincere commiseration for his haplessness, but no pervading feeling of the deep tragedy of that strangely infantine, strangely flaccid, and yet strangely sublime nature."—Spectator, lvii. 1374.

6. Shaftesbury, (the First Earl,) ("English Worthies,") Lon., 1886, p. 8vo.

"Mr. Traill, in his anxiety to keep clear of the special pleading which he detects in Mr. Christie, is from the first page to the last a special pleader himself. . . . For its literary merits Mr. Traill's book fully deserves and will doubtless find many readers. None the less Shaftesbury still awaits a biographer."—Ath., No. 3063.

"Whenever the religious history of England in the nineteenth century is written, more than one paragraph in it must be devoted to the life and labours of Charles Lowder. . . . It is impossible to read this most interesting biography without seeing that Mr. Lowder's success was due almost entirely to the daily spectacle of courage, zeal, and genuine philanthropy which his life displayed."—Acad., xxi. 188.

"This is the record of a very noble life. . . . It is for his work among the poor and outcasts of the East of London that Mr. Lowder is best known. . . . By his self-sacrificing devotion he tamed, and to a large extent civilized, one of the rudest and most lawless and vicious districts in the metropolis."—Spectator, lv. 93.

Richard Chenevix Trench, Archbishop: Letters and Memorials, Lon., 1888, 2 vols. 8vo.

"As Archbishop Trench desired that no life of him should be written, the editor of these volumes has been placed in difficult circumstances. To print the correspondence without some biographical details would have been to destroy its value; to relate many incidents of Trench's career would be to disregard his wishes. A middle course has therefore been pursued, and the result, as in most compromises of the kind, is not satisfactory. The reader of the book will find himself frequently asking questions to which he gains no answer, and, when the volumes are closed, his impression of the central character will be somewhat vague and misty. Some of the features stand out prominently; but all the man is not seen in his letters, and, while we listen to his opinions, we are seldom brought into his presence."—Spectator, lxi. 889.

Trench, William Steuart, [ante, vol. iii., add.,] 1808–1872. Ierne: a Tale, Lon., 1871, 2 vols. cr. 8vo.

"'Ierne' is an effort to account for the continuance of agrarian troubles [in Ireland] when Parliament has done all it can in the way of just legislation. . . . The ostensible patriotism and candour of Mr. Trench's last romance is even less agreeable to a thoughtful observer of Hibernian phenomena than the rough violence and egotism of his 'Realities of Irish Life.'"—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 504.

"It is racy of the soil whence it derives its inspiration; fresh, genial, healthy; somewhat fanciful, indeed, but giving out, on the whole, the true ring of conscientious narrative. . . . Under the form of a story Mr. Trench treats again the mystery of agrarian crime in Ireland, endeavours to show the causes of its obstinate resistance to the adopted remedies, . . . and prescribes his method of cure."—Spectator, xliv. 1043.

"Mr. Trevelyan has produced from very rich and attractive materials a very delightful book, and no one who knows how difficult it is to make out of very rich and attractive materials a book at all as good as the materials will fail to rate highly the judgment, the spirit, the self-control which are implied in the condensed and graphic narrative before us. . . . A more perfect picture of the great Whig essayist could hardly have been produced than the picture which Mr. Trevelyan has painted with so reticent a good taste, and yet with so much delicacy of perception."—Spectator, xlix. 433, 466.

"The interest of Mr. Trevelyan's biography begins with Macaulay's infancy and sustains itself to his death."—Sat. Rev., xli. 524.

"Although Macaulay gains little or nothing from a literary point of view by these two volumes, he gains immensely as a man of warm emotions, simple tastes, perfect uprightness, and a high sense of duty."—J. C. MORISON: Macmillan's Magazine, xxxiv. 85.

"It is genial, as biography should be, and it is congenial to the subject. Mr. Trevelyan is proud of his relative with a pride that has no desire but to show him as he was, and no vulgar wish to make him other or more. In the selection of letters of so private a nature some discretion must have been required, for there was in Macaulay's character an angry and impatient side, which must have had its utterances, often partial, and sometimes unjust."—LORD HOUGHTON: Acad., ix. 427.

5. The Early History of Charles James Fox, Lon., 1880, 8vo; 2d ed. same year.

"After the lapse of more than seventy years, and the failure of several previous attempts, Fox is at last fortunate in a biographer. . . . Mr. Trevelyan had already shown his command of a highly attractive style. Copious, rapid, invariably clear, and on fit occasions humorous or eloquent, he is one of the most readable of modern writers. A mannerism into which he still sometimes lapses always seems to be a lingering echo of Macaulay. Mr. Trevelyan, when he is not subject to foreign influence, is too fresh and too full of life to adjust his thought and language to an artificial model. . . . Fox's exploits in private and in public to the age of twenty-five would scarcely have provided subject-matter for a volume of more than five hundred pages. Mr. Trevelyan has taken the opportunity to relate much of the political history of the time, and to describe with not unsympathetic sarcasm a state of society which, as he says, must have been greatly enjoyed by those who shared its advantages."—Sat. Rev., l. 580.

"He understands men, . . . he can indicate manners, he knows facts, and he can describe them all in a style which, though it compels a comparison with Lord Macaulay's, is his own, and is, in a long volume, more attractive."—Spectator, liii. 1380.

Trollope, Anthony, [ante, vol. iii., add.,] 1815–1882. After his retirement from the post-office in 1867, he undertook the editorship of St. Paul's, a new magazine, which was discontinued after an existence of three years and a half. In 1868 he visited the United States on a postal mission, being also commissioned by the Foreign Office to make an effort in behalf of international copyright. In 1871 he paid a visit to Australia, returning by way of America in 1872, and from 1873 he made his permanent home in London. His habits of literary labor were in the highest degree regular and methodical. The time which he gave to it was three hours daily. "It was my practice," he says, "to be at my table every morning at 5.30; and it was also my practice to allow myself no mercy. . . . It had at this time become my custom—and it still is my custom, though of late I have become a little lenient to myself—to write with my watch before me, and to require from myself 250 words every quarter of an hour. I have found that the 250 words have been forthcoming as regularly as my watch went. But my three hours were not devoted entirely to writing. I always began my task by reading the work of the day before, an operation which would take me half an hour, and which consisted chiefly in weighing with my ear the sound of the words and phrases. . . . I have never written three novels in a year; but by following the plan above described I have written more than as much as three novels. . . . It may interest some if I state that during the last twenty years I have made by literature something near £70,000. . . . I look upon the result as comfortable, but not splendid." ("Autobiography," written in 1875–76, with some additions made in 1879.) His son adds, "Every day until his last illness [a month before his death] my father continued his work. He would not otherwise have been happy. He demanded from himself less than he had done ten years previously, but his daily task was always done." The number of his works, including thirty which are entered ante, vol. iii., amounts to sixty-nine. Some of them were first published in monthly parts, and others as serials in magazines. 1. "As regards the public, 'The Prime Minister' was a failure. It was worse spoken of by the press than any novel I had written. . . . 'The American Senator' and 'Popenjoy' have appeared, each with fair success. Neither of them has encountered that reproach which, in regard to 'The Prime Minister,' seemed to tell me that my work as a novelist should be brought to a close. GENERAL CRITICISM:

"There is no modern novelist who has more clearly defined to his own apprehension his literary capabilities and limitations than Mr. Trollope. He is thoroughly acquainted with both his fortes and his foibles, and so sound in his good sense that he very seldom is beguiled into toiling with futile ambition after effects that are beyond him. His proper domain is a wide and sufficiently diversified one; he is inimitably at home there; and when he invites us there to visit him we may be sure of getting good and wholesome entertainment. . . . Mr. Trollope's realism is applied to events, not to personalities. We have none of those minute suggestive touches which seem to bring the personage bodily before us; we have the scene described, but we do not look upon it. Mr. Trollope is not an observer in the sense that Tourguenieff, for instance, is an observer. The latter, by describing the peculiar features and gestures of his various dramatis personæ, by showing us the characteristic manner in which they said this or did that, artfully and insensibly brings us into intimate acquaintance with them. We should not recognize Mr. Trollope's characters if we met them; but if we were told who they were, we should know, from Mr. Trollope's testimony, what were their general traits, and how they would act under general circumstances. The logical sequence of occurrences is carefully maintained; no one does or says anything which an ordinary drawing-room knowledge of him or her might not lead us to expect, and nothing happens to them, either for good or evil, other than might befall under the dispensations of a Providence no more unjust and no more far-sighted than Mr. Trollope himself."—Spectator, liii. 754.

"He has drawn sketches, such as the portrait of Mrs. Proudie, which may stand as representatives of a class; but throughout the whole of his works there is not to be found a single character, such as Colonel Newcome, or Becky Sharp, or Jane Eyre, or Dorothea, which is a permanent addition to the world of English fiction. . . . Mr. Trollope is essentially a superficial writer and delights to deal with the outside of things. He has never successfully described the working of strong feeling. Wherever he has attempted to depict violent passion, he has always, in fact, described, not strong feeling, but the most obvious outward signs of feeling. . . . The source, in fact, of Mr. Trollope's success is to be found in the satisfaction which he gives to the almost universal liking for accurate sketches of every-day life, and to the equally universal admiration for the easy optimism which sees in English society, as it now exists, the best of all possible arrangements in the best of all possible worlds."—A. V. DICEY: Nation, xviii. 174.

"I do not think it probable that my name will remain among those who in the next century will be known as the writers of English prose fiction; but, if it does, that permanence of success will probably rest on the characters of Plantagenet Palliser, Lady Glencora, and the Rev. Mr. Crawley."—Autobiography, Amer. ed., p. 324.

Trollope, Sir J. Mysteries of Modern London: a Novel, Lon., 1886, 12mo.

Trollope, Thomas Adolphus, [ante, vol. iii., add.] In 1873 he removed from Florence to Rome, where he was for some years the correspondent of the London Standard; and in 1888 he returned to England, and has since fixed his abode in Devonshire. He has contributed an immense number of articles to periodicals. 1. A Siren, Lon., 1870, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. 2. Durnton Abbey: a Novel, Lon., 1871, 3 vols. p. 8vo. 3. Diamond cut Diamond, Lon., 1875, 2 vols. p. 8vo. 4. The Papal Conclaves, as they were and as they are, Lon., 1876, 8vo.

"What he wishes to bring before his readers is a collection of the piquant gossip which gathered round the proceedings of some of the conclaves. These are valuable in a detailed history of the Papacy, for they illustrate contemporary opinion and morality. But to isolate these stories is misleading. It elevates gossip into substantive history, and it unjustly throws ridicule on a subject which it professes to illustrate."—M. CREIGHTON: Acad., xi. 66.

5. A Peep behind the Scenes at Rome, Lon., 1877, p. 8vo. 6. The Story of the Life of Pius the Ninth, Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Those who turn to this volume, not for theology, but for facts, will find a very readable narrative, which throws a good deal of light incidentally on matters of more than ephemeral importance."—Sat. Rev., xliv. 684.

7. A Family Party in the Piazza of St. Peter, &c., Lon., 1877, 3 vols. cr. 8vo. 8. Sketches from French History, Lon., 1878, p. 8vo. 9. What I Remember, 1887, 2 vols. 8vo.

"These volumes consist of the most delightful pot-pourri that we could desire of the time just anterior to our own. . . . Figures flit across the stage and are gone, and Mr. Trollope stands by and chronicles them. . . . We shall remember the altered tempora et mores when 'liveried footmen snuffed the candles' in Keppel Street, and 'when "Evangelicalism" and "Low-Churchism" were a note of vulgarity;' but Mr. Trollope has served us and himself best when he preserves for us the delightful, racy stories of his youth, and when he gives us glimpses of those loved or worshipped faces which vanished before our time."—Acad., xxxii. 383.

Trotter, Capt. Lionel James, [ante, vol. iii., add.,] b. 1827, at Calcutta; educated at the Charterhouse, and at Merton College, Oxford; went to India as a cadet in 1847; served through the Punjab campaign of 1848–49, receiving a medal and two clasps; in the second Burmese war, 1853, &c.; retired on half-pay 1862. He edited the Indian Mail 1867–78, and has contributed to periodicals in India and England. Besides the works mentioned ante, vol. iii., he has published: 1. East and West, and other Poems, Edin., 1859. 2. (Trans.) La Sorcière, by J. Michelet, Lon., 1867, p. 8vo. 3. History of India, Lon., 1874, 8vo. 4. Warren Hastings: a Biography, Lon., 1879, 8vo.

"Regarded as a defence or a summary, its intelligibility is necessarily dependent on older and fuller records: as a separate biography the volume has a high claim to favour from the general carefulness it exhibits."—Ath., No. 2678.

5. Lord Lawrence: a Sketch of his Public Career, Lon., 1880, fp. 8vo. 6. History of India under Queen Victoria, from 1836 to 1880, Lon., 1886, 2 vols. 8vo.

"The bulk of Captain Trotter's book is taken up with war, finance, famine, and pestilence. . . . Gathering together, with equal tact and labour, the complicated elements of his vast and arduous problem, he shows forth both error and achievement; avoids strong language in censuring where he thinks censure due; and does not daub the portraits of his more favoured characters with flattering colours of fulsome panegyric."—Acad., xxxi. 54.

"The book is, on the whole, very much like other books of travel written by captains. It has a briskness and a gaiety which carry the reader easily along, but whenever he pauses in his reading he finds he is set down to a rather light refection."—Ath., No. 2797.

"Principal Tulloch's book will be of great use to those who know nothing of the subject. It is written in a kindly, pleasant spirit; the translations it contains are excellent; it is accurate as far as it goes. But it is impossible to award it higher praise. It is no contribution to the study of Pascal."—Ath., No. 2625.

6. Modern Theories in Philosophy and Religion, Edin. and Lon., 1884, 8vo.

"This is a collection of essays, many of which have been already before the public in the pages of the 'Edinburgh Review.' . . . Vigorous and wholesome."—Spectator, lviii. 217.

"The doctrine which Dr. Tulloch defends as 'Christianity' reduces itself to the personality and Fatherhood of God and the existence of an immortal spirit in man, which has a curious resemblance to the 'Deism' of Shaftesbury's 'Characteristics' and Pope's 'Universal Prayer.'"—EDITH SIMCOX: Acad., xxvi. 1.

7. Movements of Religious Thought in Britain during the Nineteenth Century: being the Fifth Series of the St. Giles Lectures, Edin. and Lon., 1885, 8vo. Posth.

"The thoroughness with which he does his work, and the painstaking diligence he has carried even into subordinate parts of it, are qualities so rare and valuable that they won our prepossession on his behalf from the first. . . . If he utterly lacks the graces of Southey's style, and the genial kindness of Southey's heart, he has the priceless advantage of a thorough knowledge of the history and spirit of Methodism; his whole life as an itinerant preacher must have been educating him for the task he has undertaken in the full maturity, it would seem, of years and experience. Yet, with all this to tell in his favour, we will not do the Wesleyan communion so grievous a wrong as to assume that he fairly represents its tone and temper towards those who think they may be good Christians enough without taking out their quarterly ticket, or assenting to every proposition set forth as gospel in the published sermons of glorious John."—*Sat. Yet it was men like Clayton and Ingham and Hervey who, despite their Ritualism, really scattered broadcast up and down the land the principles the vitality of which Wesley had, as it were, rediscovered. In the volume before us Mr. Tyerman has given us an able and, as it seems to us, very impartial history of five or six of these men."—Spectator, xlvi. 1127.

4. Life of the Rev. George Whitefield, Lon., 1877, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Mr. Tyerman boasts that he has made use of a large amount of biographical material, much of which seems to have been unknown to previous biographers. The result is two large volumes, containing about twelve hundred pages, over which the reader will at times, we fear, be inclined to slumber. There is no diversity of topics in the book. . . . If we cannot praise the biographer's style or taste, he deserves, we think, very high praise indeed for the scrupulously careful manner in which he has collected his materials."—Spectator, l. 635.

"The public on this side of the Atlantic will doubtless welcome Professor Tyndall's 'Lectures on Light' with scarcely less gladness, if with somewhat less wild enthusiasm, than that with which they were greeted on their delivery in America. Nothing, of course, can make up for the absence of the living charm and the vivida vis which won the hearts and minds of the audience, and carried the speaker on a wave of popular excitement from one American city to another. Those, however, who are familiar with the spell exercised by eloquence and scientific fire such as Professor Tyndall's can realize the effect his warm and vivid utterances must have produced upon hearers peculiarly susceptible of such impressions. . . . The lectures, cast now into a more continuous form, and supplemented by new matter which invests them with more of method and completeness, are marked throughout with Dr. Tyndall's well-known freshness of thought, clearness of exposition, and firm grasp of physical truth."—*Sat. "The completion of the work could not have been put in better hands, for Mr. Upham is at once an intimate friend of the family, who has done his work con amore; an accomplished writer, who has given these volumes a much more varied and lively character than the first; and a gentleman of literary and political experience, well fitted to describe a life so varied and striking. The ability with which the work has been performed gives it an eminent place among biographies, and secures the author a permanent literary reputation."—Nation, xviii. 93.

"Mr. Upham, acting, as he doubtless supposed, in the interests of peace and good feeling, calmly suppressed a most important chapter of our history. This is not altogether surprising, since the papers, if published, must have shown Pickering in the light of a most indefatigable and successful plotter against the Union; but the suppression renders the book nearly worthless."—Review of Lodge's Life of George Cabot: Nation, xxv. 12.

"Careful perusal of this work suggests the doubt whether very much was gained by the author's personal examination in the localities visited. . . . The merit of General Upton's work does not consist in exhibiting the results of original investigation, or in such vivid description as might have been hoped for from his actual inspection, but he presents in one well-arranged volume what before to the American reader could only be culled from numerous reports, lists, and treatises in several languages. The compilations, in their several divisions and in their summation, are accompanied by reflections and suggestions which, from the author's distinction in the studies of his profession, should and doubtless will be attentively considered."—Nation, xxvi. 376.

History of the Army of the Cumberland: its Organization, Campaigns, and Battles: written at the Request of General G. H. Thomas, chiefly from his Private Military Journal and other Documents. Illustrated with Campaign and Battle Maps compiled by Edward Ruger. Cin., 1875, 2 vols. 8vo and 4to, and atlas.

"It professes to be based upon materials mainly collected and supplied by General George H. Thomas himself, including his military journal. . . . The author has thus been furnished with exceptional facilities for his work. . . . He has devoted to his task the labor necessary to get a clear view of the movements and combinations of the troops whose story he is telling, and generally succeeds well in carrying his readers along with him."—Nation, xxi. 404.

2. The Life of Major-General George H. Thomas. Portraits and Maps. N. York, 1882, 8vo.

"He has with great pains collected and displayed in his pages the criticisms upon his hero which have given offence. . . . He has over-estimated his own power of answer, and has contented himself with general and sweeping assertions when the only successful completion of his task would be found in a full analysis of the situation, and a detailed examination of numbers which should be proof against the most searching inquiries."—Nation, xxxv. 335.

"His narrative is sketchy and disconnected. . . . He neglects entirely the second-rate authors, or at least those whom he regards as such; and he dilates complacently on those for whom he feels a liking, and seasons his disquisitions with all sorts of anecdotes about the authenticity of which he shows no extraordinary care."—Ath., No. 2584.

"A book which will give very little information to the ignorant and very little satisfaction to those who are not ignorant. . . . As a whole, this 'History of French Literature' must be pronounced thoroughly unsatisfactory. Its plan and filling-up are insufficient; its information is to the last degree untrustworthy; and its critical estimates are generally inadequate, and not seldom unsound."—George Saintsbury: Acad., xi. 241, xiii. 26.

"Those of the essays which deal with peasant properties are likely to receive the exclusive attention of readers and reviewers alike. . . . They form little more than a fourth of the volumes. . . . They are well described by the authoress herself as 'jottings during autumn rambles.' . . . She has rendered good service to the discussion of what Mill declared to be 'one of the most disputed questions in the range of political economy.'"—Sat. Rev., lx. 515.

"So strongly is she prejudiced against the system of peasant proprietorship that she does not even recognize the immense satisfaction derivable from a sense of possession, which is so clearly marked by the prevalence of land-hunger amongst so large a portion of civilized populations. Go where she will in France or Germany, Lady Verney sees nothing but objects of pity and compassion, as well as waste of time, of labour, and of money, where others find admirable examples of thrift, of industry, and of self-denial; and most especially is she indignant at the idea that the introduction of a similar system can possibly prove advantageous either to us or our Irish neighbours."—Spectator, lix. 22.

Victoria Alexandrina, Queen of Great Britain and Ireland and Empress of India, [ante, vol. iii., add.,] was proclaimed Empress of India at a great durbar in Delhi, Jan. 1, 1877. The fiftieth year of her reign, 1887, was commemorated by public ceremonies and rejoicings under the designation of "The Queen's Jubilee." More Leaves from the Journal of a Life in the Highlands, from 1862 to 1882, Lon., 1884, 8vo; 4th ed. same year.

"From a purely literary point of view there is not a great deal to say of the Queen's new book. Its style is of the simplest, and it has the charm of naturalness which belongs to simplicity. The story is told without effort or affectation of any kind, and produces its effect entirely by the force of sincerity. Her Majesty is probably a sympathetic rather than an acute and dispassionate observer, and everything that she sees is seen through sentiment. That the sentiment itself is always pure and often elevated is a reason why these records of home life in the royal circle will find a responsive echo. Otherwise the experiences recorded are not altogether such as would of themselves impart to this interesting volume a distinctive character. The book tells the story of the widowed life of a queen."—Ath., No. 2938.

Vigfusson, Gudbrand, 1830–1889, b. in the west of Iceland; was educated at schools in Bessastad and Reykiavik, and at the University of Copenhagen. After publishing works in Icelandic and Danish, he settled in England in 1864. In 1871 he was made an honorary M.A. of Oxford, and in 1877 an honorary doctor of the University of Upsala, Sweden. 1. An Icelandic-English Dictionary: based on the MS. Collection of the Late Richard Cleasby: Enlarged and Completed. With an Introduction and Life of Richard Cleasby, by G. W. Dasent, D.C.L. Lon., 1869–73, 3 parts, 4to.

"The courage of the Delegates of the Oxford Press in undertaking this work, and the care and time bestowed on printing it, will meet with their reward in the undoubted fact that they have not only given to the world one of the greatest helps to comparative philology that has ever appeared, but that this Dictionary is peculiarly a work to be published in England and by a great English University." —Extract from Dr. Dasent's Introduction.

"We have never been led to make use of a dictionary that equalled this in fulness of detail and clearness of plan, and many of the individual articles contain a wealth of suggestive allusion and interesting reference that make the book, as a whole, far more readable than most novels." —Spectator, xlvii. 1067.

Oxf., 1883, 2 vols. 8vo.

"No more splendid gift has ever been laid before the lovers of Northern literature than this treasury of the ancient poetry of Scandinavia. Here we find collected for the first time, with a purified and intelligible text, and with exact and luminous commentaries, the scanty remains of primæval Teutonic mythology, the half-Christianized legends of the All-Father and Balder the Fair, the Sibylline visions of Creation and Judgment, and the courtly poems in which the Icelandic bards extolled or lamented the kings whose descent they traced from the deities of war, harvest, and sunshine."—Charles I. The Balance of Emotion and Intellect: an Essay introductory to the Study of Philosophy, Lon., 1878, p. 8vo. 2. Essays on the Art of Pheidias, Cambridge and N. York, 1885, r. 8vo.

"It deals partly with the rudimentary generalities of artistic criticism, and in part with such archæological minutiæ as are usually welcome only to the special student. . . . Mr. Waldstein lays emphasis on the application to his studies of the comparative method, distinguished from the examination of records; that is, by comparison of the works of art themselves, by tracing from one to another the peculiarities of artist and school. . . . The points de repère by which Mr. Waldstein lays out his discussions are naturally in most cases the identifications and discoveries to which his own independent study has been turned. . . . With evident desire to argue his propositions fairly and state his cases evenly, he is possessed by his enthusiasms. While these make his discussion interesting and persuasive, they lead him to a positiveness in details which savors of over-statement and lends an ex-parte color to his arguments."—Nation, xlii. 282.

"In this large and important work Dr. Waldstein has not only carefully studied and collected the great mass of existing literature on the subject, . . . but he has also studied the subject for himself with a closeness of observation and a scientific accuracy of method which give to his views, even when they merely endorse those of previous writers, some value and originality of their own. . . . Dr. Waldstein will be the last to expect complete assent to all his propositions, but it must be said that, as a rule, he does carry the reader along with him, and presents well-considered, strong, and sensible reasons, marshalled in orderly array, in support of his various views and theories."—Sat. Rev., lxi. 232, 275.

"Dr. Waldstein is no friend of the philological treatment of archæological subjects, and does not set a high value on the reading of ancient authors and the study of texts. He aims exclusively at training the eyes for stylistic investigation. Indeed, the book brings abundant evidence of his talent in this direction,—the more welcome as he does not confine himself to stating general impressions, but endeavours by a special analysis to give an exact account of the peculiarities of style. . . . But stylistic analysis is not the only method of archæological study."—A. MICHAELIS: Acad., xxix. 65.

Wallace, Alfred Russell, F.R.S., F.R.G.S., D.C.L., [ante, vol. iii., add.,] b. at Usk, Monmouthshire; was educated as an architect and surveyor, but gave up this profession in order to devote himself to scientific research. He has made several extensive tours with the view of studying the flora and fauna of different regions, including South America, the Malay Archipelago, Australia, &c. The course of these investigations led him to abandon the belief in an original creation of distinct species of animals, and to formulate a theory of evolution substantially the same as that which Darwin was then engaged in working out but had not yet announced. (See DARWIN, C. R., supra.) He differs, however, from Darwin in ascribing the development of the mental and moral faculties of man to a process distinct from that of physical evolution. Like Professor Crookes and some other scientists, he is a believer in "Spiritualism." In recent years he has advocated a scheme for the nationalization of land and become the president of a society for the promotion of this object. He was awarded the royal medal of the Royal Society in 1868, and the gold medal of the Geographical Society of Paris in 1870. He is an occasional contributor to leading periodicals. 1. The Scientific Aspects of the Supernatural: indicating the Desirableness of an Experimental Enquiry by Men of Science into the Alleged Powers of Clairvoyants and Mediums, Lon., 1866, 8vo. 2. On Miracles and Modern Spiritualism: Three Essays, Lon., 1875, p. 8vo; 2d ed., 1881.

"Mr. Wallace by no means confines himself to the spiritualistic phenomena which have occurred under his own observation or in our own time, but stretches his hypothesis in a most elastic fashion to all the occurrences in ancient and mediæval history which have ever been reputed to be supernatural. Mr. Crookes ["Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism"] confines himself to the recital of phenomena to which his own eyes and ears have borne witness, but equally puzzles the uninitiated reader by the suddenness of the leap which he takes from the simple phenomena of mediumship to the most advanced instances of what is called in the spiritual jargon 'materialization,' passing at the same time from the attitude of a scientific sceptic to that of a religious enthusiast."—Acad., viii. 522.

4. The Geographical Distribution of Animals: with a Study of the Relations of Living and Extinct Faunas, as elucidating the Past Changes of the Earth's Surface, Lon., 1876, 2 vols. 8vo.

"It has been the aim of Mr. Wallace, in this important work of scientific description and classification, to set forth a scheme of 'geographical zoology' with reference to the origin of species, as affected by past or present conditions of the different terrestrial regions. A corresponding study is that of 'zoological geography,' which is here previously treated of. . . . He finds reason to believe that the mainland of Europe and Asia, and likewise of North America, existing as land from before the earliest of the Tertiary periods, constituted the area in which alone the successive types of vertebrate animal structure were originally produced. . . . We are gratified by the masterly skill with which Mr. Wallace has marshalled an immense number and complex variety of facts into his detailed exposition of a threefold argument, dealing with classified zoology, with palæontology, and with physical geography, in support of his ideas. . . . Mr. Wallace's labours cannot fail to be highly useful, and what he shows us is not less delightful, apart from its value as a contribution to the 'Darwinian' theory."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 172.

5. Tropical Nature, and other Essays, Lon., 1878, 8vo.

"The first four [essays] contain vivid descriptions of the principal aspects of 'tropical Nature,' while the remainder are more or less devoted to the theory of evolution, and to the explanations which it offers of the causes and origin of the said phenomena."—Acad., xiv. 91.

7. Island Life; or, The Phenomena and Causes of Insular Faunas and Floras, including a Revision and Attempted Solution of the Problem of Geological Climates, Lon., 1880, 8vo.

"Mr. Wallace has entitled himself to be called the father of the new science of zoological geography, showing that we have in the present distribution of living things over the earth's surface a key to the problem of the most ancient relations of land and water. . . . For this study islands possess, as he points out, special advantages, since they have a restricted area and definite boundaries, and their geographical and geological limits, as a rule, coincide."—Sat. Rev., l. 676.

"The work throughout abounds with interest, and even the facts themselves with which it is richly stored would be of high value without the theories which they enforce and illustrate. . . . It may be read with equal pleasure by those who are already acquainted with the general principles of distribution, and by those who wish for the first time to learn something about modern biological geography."—Ath., No. 2767.

He is a member of the Russian Imperial Geographical Society. 1. Russia, Lon., 1877, 2 vols, 8vo; 9th ed., 1883.

"The author has neither crammed for his work, nor did he undertake a journey to Russia for the express purpose of writing a pamphlet which should expand into a volume. He visited the country before the Franco-German war, and found so many things to interest him that he spent nearly six years in acquiring a knowledge of the language and studying the condition of the people. . . . He has made a capital use of his time and materials. . . . It is difficult to condense or analyze nine hundred pages treating, with many others, of such vast questions as the imperial administration, the emancipation of the serfs, the rise of local institutions, and the character of the clergy. . . . Mr. Wallace . . . has given to the world a description of the most important half of a huge Empire, which is excellent in conception, scholarly in arrangement, and unexceptionable in style."—*Sat. His two novels have had an enormous circulation. 1. The Fair God; or, The Last of the 'Tzins: a Tale of the Conquest of Mexico, Bost., 1873, 12mo.

"That a great deal of pains has been expended on the setting of the story is evident: Mexican palaces are described at great length, and a general familiarity is shown with the life of that early time. . . . "One of the most powerful historical novels that we have ever read. . . . The elaboration here and there is almost painful; the opening, like that of most archæological novels, is dull, but the scene where, in the sunrise, Montezuma reads his fate; the dance-scene; and the entry of the Spaniards to the capital, are drawn in a style of which we think few living writers capable."—Ath., No. 2400.

"The greater portion of his book is devoted to cattle, as it is on cattle that agriculture in India mainly depends. . . . Prof. Wallace claims to have discovered a peculiarity in Indian cattle, which, though known to the natives, seems to have been unrecognized by the European residents. However white the hair of the Indian cattle, he says, the skins of all but a very small percentage are black underneath. . . . Prof. Huxley, with whom the author has been in communication on this subject, has recognized the importance of this discovery as bearing on the question of the relation of colour and climate. . . . Walpole, F. G. Lord Floysham: a Novel, Lon., 1886, 2 vols. cr. 8vo.

Walpole, Spencer, b. 1839; eldest son of the Rt. Hon. Spencer Horatio Walpole, (q. v., ante, vol. iii.;) was educated at Eton; entered the War Office in 1858; appointed an inspector of fisheries in 1867; lieutenant-governor of the Isle of Man since 1882. He has contributed to periodicals. 1. The Life of the Right Hon. Spencer Perceval: including his Correspondence with Numerous Distinguished Persons. By his Grandson. Lon., 1874, 8vo.

"As a contribution to political and Parliamentary history, Mr. Spencer Walpole's work possesses considerable value."—Sat. Rev., xxxvii. 50.

2. A Manual of the Law of Salmon-Fisheries in England and Wales, Lon., 1877, 8vo. 3. A History of England, from the Conclusion of the Great War in 1815, Lon., 1878–86, 5 vols. 8vo.

"All records of those astonishing years of social, political, and material development which elapsed between the close of the great war and the present day, however badly and imperfectly they may be set out, interest us by the supreme importance of the events with which they are concerned. When, however, the story of those times is related by a writer of Mr. Spencer Walpole's keen insight alike into personal character and national growth, and the narrative becomes instinct with the qualities that true history demands, . . . the result is indeed inspiring and attractive."—Spectator, lx. 116.

"If Mr. Walpole's history is wanting in dignity and breadth, and hardly rises in its general surveys above good journalism; if he neither much enlightens, much interests, nor even much amuses us; if he shows no signs of the special training of the historian, yet he brings industry, common sense, good judgment, and almost a sufficient stock of fairness, to his task."—Ath., No. 3079.

Letters and Journals of James, Eighth Earl of Elgin, Governor of Jamaica, Governor-General of Canada, Envoy to China, Viceroy of India: with a Preface by Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D., Dean of Westminster, Lon., 1872, 8vo; 2d ed., 1873.

"Lord Elgin's nature was in the highest and finest sense of a much-abused term exemplary; and whilst rich in instruction for his followers in official service, and full of interest for all readers with a taste for biographic narrative, the story of his life makes us the personal associates of a sympathetic and high-minded man, who causes his companions to be the sharers of his strength, and raises them to his own moral level."—Ath., No. 2322.

"Mr. Walrond's part in the work is a model to be held up for imitation."—Sat. Rev., xxxiii. 636.

He has contributed to the Encyclopædia Britannica, to the Dictionary of National Biography, and to leading English reviews. 1. A History of English Dramatic Literature to the Death of Queen Anne, Lon., 1875, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Mr. Ward's two large volumes supply with remarkable completeness and detail a want which has long existed. Indeed, if we were inclined to find fault with the general method of the book, we might say that the author had carried the thoroughness of his work too far."—Sat. Rev., xlii. 140.

"Far too scholastic in temperament to write of a subject like the drama, the writer irritates by cavil when he should be conquered by the beauty around him. . . . Mr. Ward has produced a useful book, which the student can consult. He has given analyses of a great many plays and a criticism upon most of them. The history of dramatic literature is, however, still to write."—Ath., No. 2508.

"A study of the extent to which ignorance may smother even true dramatic genius, and of the power of that genius when aroused to break through the enveloping and suffocating medium. Mrs. Humphrey Ward writes admirably, though she errs a little in the direction of over-description. . . . The tale, though it hardly gives evidence of creative power, and though it does not make even Miss Bretherton herself a very living character, is full of interest, and now and then of true pathos."—Spectator, lvii. 1737.

3. (Trans.) Amiel's Journal: the "Journal Intime" of Henri-Frédéric Amiel: with Introduction and Notes, Lon., 1885, 2 vols. p. 8vo. 4. Robert Elsmere, Lon., 1888, 3 vols. cr. 8vo; 13th ed. same year. (The 5th to the 13th ed. in 1 vol.)

"In 'Robert Elsmere' the burning questions between old-fashioned faith and the new Christianity are discussed and presented and worked out in the lives of the characters with a fulness of knowledge, a breadth of appreciation, and a critical talent which shows a rare combination of gifts of a very high order. . . . The critical spirit is strong in her, and it is as a critic that she makes a powerful impression. Her book does not prove her to be a novelist. The art of telling a story does not come by nature, nor always by labour, and 'Robert Elsmere,' though it bears marks of almost painful toil, shows, unfortunately, that a natural inaptitude for the novelist's art has not been overcome."—Ath., No. 3153.

"All that the critic of fiction commonly looks to—incident, evolution of plot, artistic sequence of events, and so forth—seems secondary when compared with the startlingly vivid presentment of a human soul in the storm and stress incidental to the renunciation of past spiritual domination and the acceptance of new hopes and aspirations. . . . Merely as a tale of contemporary English life, a fictitious record of the joys and sorrows, loves and antagonisms, fortune and misfortune, of men and women more or less like individuals whom most of us know, it is keenly interesting. . . . Mrs. Ward's literary method is that of George Eliot. Indeed, there is a curious affinity in 'Robert Elsmere' to 'Adam Bede,'—though there is perhaps not an incident, possibly no play of character or acute side-light or vivifying suggestion, that could be found in both, while the plot and general scheme are entirely dissimilar. In scope 'Robert Elsmere' is ampler, in human sympathy it is broader, in insight it is as deep, if not so keen; on the other hand, it has little of the other work's dramatic intensity, and it has one ominous flaw which 'Adam Bede' has not,—though 'Middlemarch' and 'Daniel Deronda' are not void of the blight,—it suffers from diffuseness."—W. SHARP: Acad., xxxiii. 183.

"This would not be the remarkable book it is by virtue either of its few very striking characters or of the keen humour and insight it evinces, without the passionate interest which it betrays in the main subject of the book, the dwindling theological belief of a mind which is intended to gain from first to last in religious development and in depth of faith. That is the real subject of this imaginary biography, and that is treated with a power, and often with a passion, which it is impossible to ignore."—Spectator, lxi. 479.

"'Robert Elsmere' is hard reading, and requires toil and effort. Yet, if it be difficult to persist, it is impossible to stop. The prisoner on the treadmill must work severely to perform his task; but if he stops he at once receives a blow which brings him to his senses. Here, as there, it is human infirmity which shrinks; but here, as not there, the impelling motive is within. Deliberate judgment and deep interest alike rebuke a fainting reader. The strength of the book, overbearing every obstacle, seems to lie in an extraordinary wealth of diction, never separated from thought; in a close and searching faculty of social observation; in generous appreciation of what is morally good, impartially exhibited in all directions; above all, in the sense of mission with which the writer is evidently possessed, and in the earnestness and persistency of purpose with which through every page and line it is pursued. The book is eminently an offspring of the time, and will probably make a deep or at least a very sensible impression; not, however, among mere novel-readers, but among those who share, in whatever sense, the deeper thought of the period."—W. Beecher, Hartford, 1870, 12mo. 2. Saunterings, (Paris and London; the Low Countries and the Rhineland,) Bost., 1872, 16mo.

"It shows us that an amusing, humorous book—one, too, that is filled with what it is the fashion to call American humor—can be written which shall not reek with vulgarity. . . . This is not a great book on Europe, nor does it pretend to be. It is entertaining, and that in itself is a good deal."—Nation, xiv. 408.

"A clear, and doubtless an accurate, account of the condition of Tunis at the time of the French occupation."—Nation, xxxv. 491.

"When the rudimentary peculiarities of the Chevalier's English are understood, . . . and when its vagueness and redundancy have ceased to bewilder, it is found that 'during a sojourn of several months in the regency' he must have taken notes industriously, and, in spite of all drawbacks, we dare say his book will take rank as an impartial description of Tunis as it was before the French invasion."—Ath., No. 2833.

Warter, Rev. John Wood, [ante, vol. iii., add.,] 1802–1878. An Old Shropshire Oak. Edited by Richard Garnett. Vols. i., ii., Lon., 1886, 8vo; vols. iii., iv., 1891.

"The book may be described as a rambling account of the history of Shropshire, and of England generally, 'delivered under the similitude of a dream.'"—Ath., No. 3048.

"Eminently a book for the scholar, the divine, and the country gentleman."—Acad., xxix. 477.

Washburn, Charles Ames, b. 1822, at Livermore, Me.; graduated at Bowdoin 1848; admitted to the bar; settled in California and became a journalist; appointed U.S. commissioner to Paraguay 1861, and was minister resident there 1863–68, when he was obliged to leave the country to avoid being arrested on a charge of conspiring against the dictator Lopez. (See MARSHMAN, GEORGE F., supra.) He has since resided at Morristown, N.J. 1. The History of Paraguay: with Notes of Personal Observations and Reminiscences of Diplomacy under Difficulties, Bost. and N. York, 1871, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Mr. Washburn's personal recollections are intensely interesting; . . . but it is these very recollections that almost entirely unfit him for an historian, even if on other grounds he were qualified for this vocation."—Nation, xii. 436.

"After making every allowance for unrestrained feelings, and for the just hatred inspired by the actions of three detestable tyrants, we cannot but recognize the general accuracy of these pages, so far as Paraguay is concerned."—Ath., No. 2294.

Washburne, Elihu Benjamin, 1816–1887, brother of Israel Washburn, supra; b. at Livermore, Me.; studied law at Harvard; admitted to the bar 1840, and practised in Galena, Ill.; member of Congress 1853–69; secretary of state for a short time in 1869, and U.S. minister to France from that year till 1877. He wrote his name (originally Washburn) with a final e. 1. Sketch of Edward Coles, Second Governor of Illinois, and the Slavery Struggle of 1823–24, Chic., 1882, 8vo. 2. Recollections of a Minister to France, 1869–1877. Illust. N. York, 1887, 2 vols. 8vo.

"Although written somewhat stiffly, it gives a graphic picture, from the stand-point of a close observer, of the most striking episode in recent European history. It is disappointing only in its characterizations of the extraordinary men who figure on its pages, of whom Mr. Washburne gives rather superficial sketches. . . . Notwithstanding this defect, the book deserves the high place which it will doubtless take among contemporary memoirs."—Nation, xlvi. 431.

Waters, Robert Edmond Chester, M.A., b. 1828; graduated at St. Mary Hall, Oxford, 1851; called to the bar at the Inner Temple 1852. 1. Genealogical Memoirs of the Kindred Families of Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, and Thomas Wood, Bishop of Lichfield: Illustrated with Twelve Sheet Pedigrees, Engravings of All Archbishop Cranmer's Official Seals, and Shields of Arms. Printed for the Author. Lon., 1877, 8vo. (Consists of two chapters of a work on the Family of Chester mentioned below.) 2. Genealogical Memoirs of the Elder and Extinct Line of the Wollastons of Shenton and Finborough: their Ancestors and Connections: Illustrated with Sheet Pedigrees and Shields of Arms, Lon., 1877, 8vo. (Another chapter from the work next mentioned.)

"Mr. Waters . . . has a peculiar gift of making his researches attractive to the million, and by his almost unique skill in setting off his materials to the best advantage he somehow contrives to raise the study of genealogy to the level of the fine arts."—Augustus Jessop: Acad., xiv. 231.

3. Genealogical Memoirs of the Extinct Family of Chester of Chicheley: their Ancestors and Descendants, Lon., 1878, 2 vols. 4to.

"It is the merit of Mr. Waters' volumes that they never let us feel that we are dealing with mere names; his people are alive, or at any rate we are carried back to the times when they were living; the author has that rare gift of historical imagination which enables him to sympathize with the past, and so to present us with vivid sketches of a state of things which has gone forever. Perhaps it can be said of no book in the language extending over 800 quarto pages, and reviewing more or less carefully the lives of some thousands of people, some of whom played a very inconsiderable part in their day,—a book, too, which does not even profess to be more than Genealogical Memoirs of an extinct family of English gentry of the second rank,—that it is not only a readable book but an eminently entertaining one, and that it deserves to take rank as a valuable contribution to the domestic history of England. We have nothing like it on our side of the Channel, and it may be doubted whether even the old French genealogists ever produced a work at once so careful and so exhaustive."—Augustus Jessop: Acad., xv. 533.

4. Genealogical Memoirs of the Families of Chester of Bristol, Barton Regis, London, and Almondbury; and also of the Families of Astry of London, Kent, Beds, Hunts, Oxon, and Gloucestershire, Lon., 1881, 4to.

"Mr. Waters occupies quite a unique position among genealogists. . . . Here is a genealogical monograph upon half a dozen families extinct in the male line, no one of which ever produced a greater notable than a Lord Mayor of London; and, by some unaccountable witchery, the author lures us on actually to read one hundred pages about these people, and makes us more than half believe that they were great and good."—Augustus Jessop: Acad., xx. 271.

9. Disguises: a Drama, Lon., 1879, 12mo.

"The type of drama [the "Romantic"] to which we have assigned this work is relatively low; the artificial and the capricious are of inferior value in art to simplicity and law; surprises and disguises, however fascinating, stand below the sheer sincerity of the structure of the highest drama. But relatively to this comparatively low type, it has considerable excellences: the colouring, if not very rich, is picturesque; the character-painting is sometimes subtle, if not profound; and lastly, that crowning grace of the grand style of drama, that indispensable excellence of the lighter kind, it is 'writ in very choice' English."—Spectator, liii. 144.

Julien Vinson, Lon., 1877, 8vo; 2d ed., with Appendix on Basque Poetry, 1879.

"To the scientific comparer of stories the Basque tales will offer little that is new. But . . . they to some extent fill up a gap which has long remained open."—Ath., No. 2568.

"There is very little in these Basque stories which is specially characteristic, except the names of the supernatural beings who figure in them. . . . We find no new tales of any length, nothing of importance which has not been repeated unnumbered times by German, Scandinavian, and Slavonic lips."—W. R. S. RALSTON: Acad., xi.129.

"It fails to a certain extent in vividness, and, as it seems to us, for a certain reason. Miss Wedgwood does not sympathize with fanaticism, and in a certain sense Wesley was a fanatic, because a one-idead man. . . . Her quiet, thoughtful style of writing contrasts oddly with the mental tension of the man with whom she is occupied."—Spectator, xliv. 18.

"Her characters are drawn with great fairness and discrimination."—Sat. Rev., xxx. 719.

5. The Moral Ideal: a Historic Study, Lon., 1888, 8vo. (The author describes her work as "an effort to illustrate from the history of moral thought the belief that man can strive towards no virtue in which he does not feel the sympathy of God.")

"Mr. Weise unhesitatingly adopts the theory, which has lately found some favour in America, that the circumstantial account of the lost Atlantic island given by Plato in his 'Critias' rests on genuine historical tradition. . . . If, however, Mr. Weise enters into this fascinating dream-land with a confidence not likely to be generally shared by classical scholars, he does not permit himself any further indulgence in the realms of fancy; and on reaching the Middle Ages he becomes at once a sober-minded and critical historian. . . . The copies of rare maps which illustrate the text form by no means the least attractive feature of this interesting book."—Acad., xxvii. 201.

"Learning and thought ruin eloquence more frequently than they aid it; but all Canon Westcott's learning and all his thoughtfulness cannot prevent the fire of his Christian enthusiasm, the energy of his Christian love, from bursting forth and illuminating his style, so that he is a preacher as well as a critic and a philosopher."—Acad., xxx. 341.

"Dr. Westcott is a spiritual optimist: in the shattering of old beliefs, the non-fulfilment of Scripture promises, the moral degradation rather than the moral progress of society, he sees only discipline which should quicken reverence, discords resolving into harmonies. . . . The book is a model of rhetorical beauty, a storehouse of devotional aspirations. As a contribution to scientific theology it is disappointing."—Spectator, lx. 774.

"This text, on which the labour of nearly thirty years has been spent, whatever exceptions it may be open to in particular instances, has every claim to be regarded as the final result of those methods of criticism which began with the proposals of Bentley in 1720, and have been pursued by a line of illustrious scholars down to our own day. . . . Time will show whether it is destined to become the new textus ab omnibus receptus."—ROBERT B. DRUMMOND: Acad., xx. 249.

"Superficial such work is apt to be, but none the less it presupposes at least great diligence and painstaking on the author's part, and deserves some of the honor bestowed on historical research of a higher order. Mr. Westcott's performance is fully up to the average, whether in point of laborious compilation or of literary style."—Nation, xxvi. 297.

"This work is a multum in parvo of the growth and spread of Phallicism, as we commonly call the worship of nature or fertilizing powers. I felt, when solicited to enlarge and illustrate it on the sudden death of the lamented author, that it would be desecration to touch so complete a compendium by one of the most competent and soundest thinkers who have written on this world-wide faith. None knew better or saw more clearly than Mr. Westropp that in this oldest symbolism and worship lay the foundations of all the goodly systems we call Religions."—J. G. R. FORLONG: Introduction.

Wheeler, J. Talboys, [ante, vol. iii., add.,] formerly secretary of the chief commissioner of British Burma. 1. Memorandum on Persian Affairs: with a Supplementary Note on the Turkomans, Char Eimaks, and Seistan, Calcutta, 1871, fol.

"It would be difficult to over-estimate the usefulness of the task which Mr. Wheeler has lately undertaken to accomplish,—the indication, namely, of 'the political status of those countries which lie between Persia on the one side and Khiva, Bokhara, and Afghanistan on the other.' But . . . Mr. Wheeler's 'political status' turns out to be something little short of chaos. The 'Memorandum' reveals a state of things in which boundaries, principalities, and powers change and interchange in a manner suggestive of the doctrine of transmutation of energy."—*Sat. "There are some parts of Mr. White's book which we should cut out, and there are other parts which are spoiled by a needless striving after jocularity; but there is a great deal which bears the mark of sound sense and keen observation."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 374.

"The faults of this well-known book are due to the author's dogmatism and to his lack of a sound knowledge of English in its Anglo-Saxon period; but the book is decidedly useful as a stimulus to habits of intelligent speaking and writing."—Critic, v. 166.

"The 'normal speech' to which we are introduced, a nondescript alleged to be dictated by 'reason,' and a rival of usage, is the newest invention claiming to be sober philology. As abundantly illustrated by Mr. White, it is clearly indistinguishable from the offspring of pure whim."—Nation, xxxi. 275, [Fitzedward Hall.]

7. The American View of the Copyright Question, N. York, 1880, 12mo. 8. England Without and Within, Bost., 1881, 12mo.

"It is to be admitted that most of what he has to say is truthful, that a great deal of it is acute and subtle, and that all of it is extremely interesting. It is always pleasant to hear what a friendly critic has to say about us; it is doubly pleasant when the critic is on the whole so flattering and courteous as Mr. Grant White. . . . The oddest part of the book is perhaps the exceeding thinness of its erudition."—Grant Allen: Acad., xx. 154.

"These volumes, in all that relates to the sculptured stones, are valuable and interesting. The illustrations, made from his own sketches, are excellent. . . . As long as the author keeps to his special subject, he is clearly writing of what he knows something about, but directly he steps beyond it we find him tripping."—Sat. Rev., xli. 723.

Whitman, Walter, (commonly Walt,) [ante, vol. iii., add.,] has resided in Camden, N.J., since 1873, having been obliged by a paralytic attack, which left his physical powers permanently weakened, to resign his clerkship in Washington. In 1889, on the occasion of his seventieth birthday, he was present at a public dinner attended by a large number of his friends and admirers. Besides the editions of "Leaves of Grass" mentioned ante, vol. iii., one (the fourth) was published in Washington in 1872, another in Camden in 1876, and another in Boston in 1882, the last especially being much enlarged and the matter differently arranged. Copies of the first edition are now very scarce, and command high prices; of the third edition, (1860,) many copies fraudulently obtained were disseminated in America. 1. (Contains an introductory chapter, many short poems written between 1850 and 1880, estimates of Burns and Tennyson, and a portrait of the author.)

"In him we meet a man not shaped out of old-world clay, not cast in any old-world mould, and hard to name by any old-world name. In his self-assertion there is a manner of powerful nonchalantness which is not assumed; he does not peep timidly from behind his works to glean our suffrages, but seems to say, 'Take me or leave me, here I am, a solid and not an inconsiderable fact of the universe.' He disturbs our classifications. He attracts us; he repels us; he excites our curiosity, wonder, admiration, love; or, our extreme repugnance. He does anything except leave us indifferent. However we feel towards him, we cannot despise him. He is 'a summons and a challenge.' He must be understood, and so accepted, or must be got rid of. Passed by he cannot be. . . . He is the first representative democrat in art of the American continent. Not that he is to be regarded as a model or a guide; great principles and great passions which must play their part in the future are to be found in his writings; but these have not yet cleared themselves from their amorphous surroundings. At the same time he is before all else a living man, and must not be compelled to appear as mere official representative of anything. He will not be comprehended in a formula. No view of him can image the substance, the life and movement of his manhood, which contracts and dilates, and is all over sensitive and vital. . . . As in all else, so with regard to the form of what he writes, Walt Whitman can find no authority superior to himself, or rather to the rights of the subject which engages him. There is, as Mr. Rossetti has observed, 'a very powerful and majestic rhythmical sense' throughout his writings, prose and verse, (if we consent to apply the term verse to any of them,) and this rhythmical sense, as with every great poet, is original and inborn. His works, it may be, exhibit no perfect crystal of artistic form, but each is a menstruum saturated with form in solution. He fears to lose the instinctive in any process of elaboration, the vital in anything which looks like mechanism. . . . One feels, as it has been well said, that although no counting of syllables will reveal the mechanism of the music, the music is there, and that 'one would not for something change ears with those who cannot hear it.' . . . Nevertheless, when we read not the lyrical portions of Whitman's poetry, but what may be called his poetical statements of thoughts and things, a suspicion arises that if the form be suitable here to the matter, it must be because the matter belongs rather to the chaos than the kosmos of the new-created world of art."—E. Dowden: Studies in Literature, 473–87.

"One great anomaly of Whitman's case has been, that while he is an aggressive champion of democracy and of the working-man, in a broad sense of the term working-man, his admirers have been almost exclusively of a class the farthest possibly removed from that which labors for daily bread by manual work. Whitman has always been truly caviare to the multitude. It was only those who knew much of poetry, and loved it greatly, who penetrated the singular shell of his verses and rejoiced in the rich, pulpy kernel. Even with connoisseurs, Whitman has been somewhat of an acquired taste. . . . A cardinal sin in the eyes of most critics is the use of French, Spanish, and American-Spanish words, which are scattered here and there, as if Whitman had picked them up, sometimes slightly incorrectly, from wandering minstrels, Cubans, or fugitives from one of Walker's raids. He shows crudely the American way of incorporating into the language a handy or a high-sounding word without elaborate examination of its original meaning, just as we absorb the different nationalities that crowd over from Europe. His thought and his mode of expression are immense, often flat, very often monotonous, like our great sprawling cities with their endless scattering of suburbs. Yet when one gets the 'hang' of it, there is a colossal grandeur in conception and execution that must finally convince whoever will be patient enough to look for it. His rhythm, so much burlesqued, is all of a part with the man and his ideas. It is apparently confused, really most carefully schemed, certainly to a high degree original. It has what to the present writer is the finest thing in the music of Wagner, —a great booming movement or undertone, like the noise of heavy surf. . . . He certainly represents, as no other writer in the world, the struggling, blundering, sound-hearted, somewhat coarse, but still magnificent vanguard of western civilization that is encamped in the United States."—Essays from The Critic, 177 et seq.

"In spite of an uneven and emphatic key of expression, something trenchant and straightforward, something simple and surprising, distinguishes his poems. He has sayings that come home to one like the Bible. We fall upon Whitman, after the works of so many men who write better, with a sense of relief from strain, with a sense of touching nature, as when one passes out of the flaring, noisy thoroughfares of a great city into what he himself has called, with unexcelled imaginative justice of language, 'the huge and thoughtful night.'"—R. L. Stevenson: Familiar Studies of Men and Books, 116.

"First published in the 'Journal of the American Oriental Society' and our heavy reviews, they are now collected for us, and thousands who will read them gladly. . . . Thoroughness is his most marked characteristic. Then there are few books of such depth and compass as his expressed with as much simplicity. And compression never fails. In a wonderfully small space we get a sufficient body of facts for a general understanding of the history of Vedic study, of the Vedas themselves, and their relations to modern mind and life. Now and then the author rises with his thought to rhythm and eloquence. The essay on the Avesta has the same merits. . . . In two articles on Max Müller's 'Lectures on Language,' (in which Professor Whitney is very exacting,) and in those which follow, . . . Professor Whitney sets forth his views of the nature of language against Müller, Bleek, Schleicher, and Steinthal. . . . When we read Professor Whitney's statements of his own views, we assent; but when we read his assaults on others, we often dissent. The fact seems to be that this region of language is under the concurrent jurisdiction of the will and the unconscious involuntary activities, so that those who would exclude the will from it, and those who would make the will sole cause in it, alike err."—Nation, xvi. 96, [F. A. MARCH.]

"The general reader will hardly be much interested in the earlier essays, which are mainly occupied with the interpretation of the Rig Veda, and certain unnecessarily severe censures on other scholars. But the essays on 'Language' will interest a far wider circle of readers, for the author is always clear and vigorous, and very often his remarks are eminently suggestive, and open a new track to the student."—Ath., No. 722.

"He is the veteran of an epoch that can never recur; that scarcely can be equalled, however significant future periods may seem from the artist's point of view. The primitive life, the old struggle for liberty, are idealized in his strains. "The implied contempt of the author for that unhappy, but comparatively unimportant, section of the community who were educated elsewhere than at Eton may perhaps annoy sensitive outsiders. But it is perfectly certain that the book could not have been written but for the exuberant Etonianism of the author, and we should not wish to deal harshly with feelings which have procured us the pleasure of reading some excellent and excellently told new Eton stories, and of having from an eye-witness the exact facts concerning a number of already celebrated episodes in the history of the school."—*Sat. "He has lucidly expounded the main characteristics of each successive phase of religious thought. He has given sketches of those earnest reformers who at different times have endeavoured to recall their fellow-religionists from debasing idolatry to a purer conception of the Godhead. He has carefully compared all the minute ceremonies now performed at the birth, tonsure, marriage, and death of an orthodox Hindu with the ritual of Manu or the dictates of ancient sages. The more ponderous portions of the work are succeeded by anecdotes, which are well chosen and appropriate."—Sat. Rev., lvii. 488.

Wilson, Andrew, [ante, vol. iii., Wilson, A., third of the name, add.,] 1831–1881, son of Rev. John Wilson, D.D., of Bombay, infra; was educated at Edinburgh University, and at Tübingen, Germany; began his literary career as a writer for the Bombay Times, and soon afterwards became connected with Blackwood's Magazine, to which he contributed during the remainder of his life. About 1860 he became editor of the China Mail, and accompanied the Pekin expedition to Tientsin. For a number of years before his death his health, owing to an affection of the heart, was very feeble. His journey into the upper valleys of the Himalayas in 1874 was undertaken at a time when he was unable to walk or to mount a horse. He had himself carried in a dandi by a party of native bearers, and, unaccompanied by any European, made his way from Simla to Chinese Thibet, and thence along the whole line of the Western Himalayas, sometimes travelling at an altitude of 18,000 feet above the sea. The Abode of Snow: Observations on a Journey from Chinese Tibet to the Indian Caucasus, through the Upper Valleys of the Himálaya, Edin. and Lon., 1875, 8vo; 2d ed., 1876.

"After a distinguished literary career in China, Mr. Wilson has latterly made Western India his home. . . . There is an airy freshness about Mr. Wilson's style, which seems to hint to the reader that passage after passage was really composed and written down whilst the explorer was at his favourite height—12,000 feet—above the level of the sea, with the immeasurable expanse of snowy peaks before him, and beneath his feet the shimmering glaciers which are the cradle of the mightiest rivers in India. . . . His travels are not very remarkable ones, but he describes all he meets with on his way with inimitable spirit."—Ath., No. 2496.

"The Vale of Kashmir produced on this traveller its never-failing effect; and the accounts of the ruins of the great temple of Martand, of the Manasbal and the Wulär lakes, and of the summer capital of Srinugger, though to be found in the works of other travellers, are full of interest. . . . We can recommend Mr. Wilson's volume to the reading public. It is another record of intrepidity and adventure in difficult and unknown regions; and while it reveals new worlds to members of the Alpine Club who think Mont Blanc tame and Elburz overrated, it affords some help to the comprehension of strange races and to the solution of topics which are constantly being pressed on the notice of the Viceroy of India or the Secretary of State."—Sat. Rev., xl. 397.

Wilson, Charles Heath, d. 1882; b. in Edinburgh; son of Andrew Wilson, a distinguished Scotch landscape-painter; studied art in Edinburgh, and in 1826 removed with his father to Italy, but afterwards returned to Edinburgh, where he practised as an architect. About 1846 he was appointed master of the New Art School in Glasgow, and retained that position till 1864, when he retired, and during the remainder of his life resided in Italy, chiefly in Florence, where he was the centre of a large literary and artistic circle. Life and Works of Michelangelo Buonarroti: the Life partly compiled from that by Aurelio Gotti. Illust. Lon., 1876, 8vo; 2d ed., 1881.

"Mr. Wilson has aimed at producing a true history, discarding most of the more recondite and psychological analyses of the critics, and seeking to give to his subject that solidarity which will be most acceptable to English readers. His success has been commensurate to his advantages, his diligence, learning, and taste. . . . The book will mark an epoch in English studies of the great master." —Ath., No. 2526.

"The work of Mr. Wilson has not any more than that of Signor Gotti, and does not profess to have, the strength and scope of a sufficient or ideal biography. But . . . it is to be applauded for some merits of its own; it establishes one or two special points for good, and in general gives English readers an intelligible view of the new materials and their bearing."—SIDNEY COLVIN: Acad., x. 272.

"The narrative virtually consists of two independent stories; for, whilst Mr. Wilson describes the route from Zanzibar to the Victoria Nyanza and his five journeys across that lake, as well as Uganda, where he resided for many months, his fellow-worker is content to deal with the regions to the north."—Ath., No. 2859.

"A most instructive and valuable book of travel, written in a style which is a happy combination of sprightliness and modesty, by two representatives of the Church Missionary Society, who were sent to Uganda expressly because Mr. Stanley had said that the realms of King Mtesa—the singular potentate whom Speke 'discovered' in his travels—offered an admirable field for evangelization."—Spectator, lv. 472.

"He has given abundant proofs that he can upon occasion write neatly and well, but, as a rule, his style may be described as Carlyle-and-water, with a very large infusion of water. . . . If Carlyle's battle-pieces are as superior to Macaulay's as Vernet's are to Barker's, Col. Wilson's battle-pieces are mere sign-board daubs, compared with the brilliant and highly-finished, if somewhat artificial, battle-pieces of Macaulay."—Spectator, xlix. 1105.

"Military readers will find in Colonel Wilson a critic who pre-eminently has the courage of his opinions, and who justly holds that students of the art of war may learn something from generals who lived before Count Moltke. . . . It is the more to be regretted that its author should not have confined himself more closely to his subject and have treated it without a succession of flourishes and antics which no biography could have better spared."—*Sat. "Dr. Daniel Wilson, . . . having studied with some care the doctrine of evolution as taught by Mr. Darwin and his disciples, finds, as many have found before him, a gap in the chain which ought continuously to connect the highest with the lowest organization. In his mind the very worst savage obstinately refuses to be hooked on to the very best monkey. . . . Mr. Wilson fails to discover the 'missing link' in the realm of reality. He wants a being superior to the very wisest ape in every reasoning power short of rationality, but inferior to the most [least?] anthropoid ape in those natural provisions for covering, defence, and subsistence which are the substitutes for the reasoning foresight and inherited knowledge on which the naked, defenceless savage relies. This being, not appearing in the realm of reality, Mr. Wilson discovers in the Caliban of Shakspeare, who, in company with the Caliban of Mr. Robert Browning, is carefully considered as a Monster, a Metaphysician, and a Theologian."—*Sat. Essays and Addresses: an Attempt to treat some Religious Questions in a Scientific Spirit, Lon., 1887, cr. 8vo.

"He discusses with an admirable mixture of freedom and caution most of the burning questions which have come up for solution since the publication of 'Essays and Reviews.' . . . Taken as a whole, the book must be said to meet admirably one conspicuous want of the church and time. . . . Mr. Wilson is clear-sighted enough to perceive, and courageous enough to avow, that Christianity must share, to a certain extent, the evolution which is the common law of the universe. He aspires to a 'new Reformation.'"—JOHN OWEN: Acad., xxxii. 81.

Wilson, Sir William James Erasmus, LL.D., F.R.S., [ante, vol. iii., add.,] 1809–1884. He had taken up the study of dermatology, then very little understood, in the first instance to alleviate the sufferings of the London poor. Of his labors in it he himself said late in life, "I found it a quackery; I left it a science." He founded the chair of dermatology in the College of Surgeons in 1869, and that of pathology at Aberdeen University in 1881, and made other munificent gifts to medical institutions. About eight years before his death he became deeply interested in Egyptology. He was president of the Egyptian Exploration Fund, had Cleopatra's Needle transported at his own expense from Alexandria to London, and spent much of his time in the study of Egyptian history. 1. With IRWIN, MISS AGNES, (ed.) Worthy Women of our First Century, Phila., 1877, 8vo.

"This volume is a Centennial torso. . . . Lives of thirteen worthy women from the old thirteen States, written by women belonging in each case to the same State as the subject of the biography,—such was the scheme of the Women's Department of the Centennial Commission. . . . The result is five individual biographies and one collective, ('Women of New Hampshire.') . . . The least substantial chapter in this book is the sketch of Rebecca Motte, of South Carolina; the best, as a literary performance, is Mrs. Sarah Butler Wister's notice of Deborah Logan. . . . This collection of biographies fully justifies the pains taken to gather it, and will long be read with interest and profit." —Nation, xxv. 200.

"Mrs. Henry Wood has certain qualities which should have made her one of our best novel-writers; popular is another word. No one lays out the plan of a story better than she does, and even Mr. Wilkie Collins himself, to whom ingenuity is the Alpha and Omega of his craft, is not greater than she is in the cleverness with which she devises her puzzles and fits the parts together. But Mrs. Wood loses herself in certain besetting sins, which are apparently beyond her power to overcome. She is puerile, commonplace, and ineradicably vulgar. . . . We do not find in her books a trace of that professional pride and thoroughness which desires to make a thing good all through without reference to publishers or profit."—Sat. Rev., xxxii. 502.

"It would perhaps be too much to say that the late Mr. J. G. Wood ever occupied a prominent place in the literature of his country: but we should think there had been few more successful writers in his own particular line. The gift of popular exposition was his to a marked degree, and the art of conveying knowledge in a simple and attractive form. The knowledge, too, was of an extremely varied and comprehensive kind. The man who had a thorough acquaintance with Mr. Wood's works would become a kind of walking dictionary of useful information acquired through the study of literature far lighter than nine-tenths of the novels published in these days."—Spectator, July 12, 1890, 57.

"Undoubtedly my father's great distinction was that of being the pioneer in the work of popularizing natural history and presenting it to the general public in the form of an alluring and deeply interesting study. He had many subsequent imitators, but he himself imitated no one. He found zoology a dull and dry study, open to none but the favoured few who enjoyed special aptitude, special opportunities, and special circumstances for its pursuit. He left it an open book of world-wide interest, needing no scholar to read or interpret it, no unusual zeal or persistence in order to decipher its secrets. His was the pen that led other pens to write upon the subject. His was the enthusiasm which fired the enthusiasm of others; which made observers out of mechanics, and naturalists out of artisans. And together with ability and enthusiasm he united a dogged perseverance which enabled him to accomplish a work which, even so far as its mere extent is concerned, very few men have excelled."—The Rev. J. G. Wood: his Life and Work, by Theodore Wood, p. 125.

Wood, John Turtle, d. 1890. He spent eleven years, 1863–74, in making excavations at Ephesus, partly with funds supplied by the British Museum. Discoveries at Ephesus: including the Site and Remains of the Great Temple of Diana. Illust. 1876, r. 8vo.

"Here is a record of honest hard work, carried on for a long time in the teeth of difficulties of every kind, and rewarded with discoveries of real and high moment. It is something to be able to draw a picture of the famous temple which passed for one of the wonders of the world. And, from another point of view, it is at least as much to have brought to light the precious store of inscriptions which Mr. Wood puts together at the end of his sumptuous volume."—*Sat. Pygmalion, Lon., 1881, p. 8vo.

"The poem contains some very striking passages, and every now and then one finds an eminently picturesque image or a sounding and excellent line. . . . 'Pygmalion' is hardly, on the whole, an advance on 'My Beautiful Lady.' The earlier poem has a spontaneity and a tender grace of sentiment which are less conspicuous in the present work; while Mr. Woolner seems to find a greater harmony of expression in lyrical measures than in blank verse."—Ath., No. 2826.

"Dr. Woolsey's book . . . is divided into two parts, the speculative and the historical or descriptive, or, as he himself calls it, the practical. The two parts are not distinctly separated, however, as a good deal of speculation, and not unnecessarily or improperly, runs through the description. The work, taken altogether, is a very important contribution to the literature of the subject,—indeed, the most important American contribution to it since Calhoun's. . . . The portion of the work which we have called the speculative portion . . . impresses us, however, as less clear and instructive than the historical and descriptive portion."—Nation, xxvi. 293.

"The book is the history of a short episode in the life of a good man and brave soldier—Colonel Durnford—between the sad affair of the Bushman's River Pass and the fatal one of Isandhlwana, where . . . Colonel Durnford fell. The historian is an enthusiastic young friend, . . . whose simple, if sometimes too detailed, narrative leaves behind a very vivid picture of the object of his devotion."—Spectator, liii. 278.

"On no reasonable principle can we think it necessary to have given twelve hundred pages even to the life of such a man as Bishop Patteson. A biography is not a cairn whose builders show their reverence for the dead by the number of stones which they accumulate. . . . Having indulged in these complaints, let us add that even a less skilful biographer than Miss Yonge could hardly have failed, with the materials available, to produce a book of no common interest. . . . Such a life, with its grand lessons of unselfishness, is a blessing and an honour to the age in which it is lived. The biography which we have here reviewed cannot be studied without pleasure and profit."—Sat. Rev., xxxvi. 818.

Young, Joseph H. The Yearly Moons, Phila., 1883, sq. 12mo.

Young, Rev. Julian Charles, M.A., 1806–1873, son of Charles Mayne Young, the tragedian; graduated at Worcester College, Oxford, 1828; rector of Southwick, Sussex, 1844–58, and from then of Ilmington, Worcestershire. 1. A Memoir of Charles Mayne Young, Tragedian: with Extracts from his Son's Journal. Illust. Lon., 1871, 2 vols. 8vo.

"He has contrived to bring out a narrative often as detailed as Pepys, as versatile and life-like as Boswell, and as full of personal interest as Crabb Robinson, with much higher execution and general tone."—Sat. Rev., xxxi. 604.

"The memoir of Mr. Young's father, which appears most prominently on the title-page of these two volumes, occupies only 133 pages out of 742. . . . There is scarcely any description of Young as an actor. . . . There is very much in the journal which is new to us, the anecdotes are marked by considerable variety, we are introduced to several names of note, and we listen with great interest."—Spectator, xliv. 837.

2. Last Leaves from the Journal of Julian Charles Young, Rector of Ilmington, Warwickshire, Lon., 1875, 8vo.

"There is something more in this volume than Last Leaves from the Rev. Julian Young's Journal: there are leaves, much more interesting, from the journal of his father, the tragedian. Moreover, there are hitherto unpublished letters from the Rev. Frederick William Robertson, the once exceedingly popular, and eminently unpopular, clergyman of Brighton; and, lastly, there are half a dozen discourses from the pen of Mr. Julian Young himself. Not to say or to mean it offensively at all, this is a patchwork book. The best part in it, for solidity, is the actor's; the next best, for fun, is the Rector of Ilmington's; the queerest part is the Rev. Mr. Robertson's, whose letters might be such as Heine would have written had he been converted to Broad-Churchism as he lay joking and struggling with death."—Ath., No. 2490.

Zimmern, Miss Helen, b. 1846, in Hamburg; a contributor to the London Athenæum, Spectator, and a number of English and German periodicals. 1. Stories in Precious Stones. Illust. Lon., 1873, p. 8vo; 3d ed. same year. 2. Told by Waves; Stories in Nature, Lon., 1873, p. 8vo. 3. Arthur Schopenhauer: his Life and his Philosophy, Lon., 1876, p. 8vo.

"The authoress of the work before us has undertaken a task of some difficulty,—to give, in English and for general readers, a concise account of Schopenhauer and his writings. The book has, of course, the defects of its class, but bears evidence of honest care to present a true representation of the man and his teaching."—Ath., No. 2543.

4. Gotthold Ephraim Lessing: his Life and Works, Lon., 1878, p. 8vo.

"Of these two biographies that by Mr. Sime [see SIME, JAMES, supra] is the more elaborate. He assumes in his reader an entire ignorance of who Lessing was and what he wrote. . . . Miss Zimmern, on the other hand, presupposes too general an acquaintance with subjects in which she is profoundly versed. . . . Both biographers draw their material from the same sources; the difference in treatment consists in the lady principally confining herself to a sketch of Lessing's life, and the gentleman superadding a minute analysis of all his writings, and giving lengthened comments upon them. The conclusions in either case are almost identical, and are substantially just. What the reader will miss in both are those biographical details which impart interest and vividness to a narrative."—Ath., No. 2626.

"Mr. Sime's book must be admitted to be the better of the two, and indeed Miss Zimmern's is so much marred by her imperfect knowledge of English that it will need much careful revision by a competent English scholar to make it worthy of the welcome which it otherwise deserves to meet. . . . Were it not for the sad defect which we have mentioned, and even, perhaps, in spite of that defect, the general reader would gain, we think, a clearer view of Lessing from Miss Zimmern than from her rival and predecessor."—Spectator, li. 672.

"Miss Zimmern has . . . mastered a pure, simple English which fits the antiquity of her subject, and the stories are told in a manner which must provoke the envy and admiration of all who have attempted this singularly difficult style of composition."—Sat. Rev., lv. 219.

7. Maria Edgeworth, ("Eminent Women" Ser.,) Lon., 1883, cr. 8vo.

"Miss Helen Zimmern . . . has been able to justify herself as a biographical cook by collecting a mass of material so copious and varied as to make her task easy and her work original. . . . She possesses a just sense of proportion, and great skill in the arrangement and treatment of materials. Her knowledge is seldom defective, and her critical judgments are temperate and sound. . . . Her style . . . lacks animation, character, sparkle."—Sat. Rev., lvii. 552.

"Marked by freshness and originality of view rather than by depth of research or ripeness of critical knowledge."—Sat. Rev., xxxiii. 86.

"He seems to possess the quickening power which makes the dry bones live."—Spectator, xlv. 597.

2. A Month in Switzerland, Lon., 1873, p. 8vo.

"Much fresh light was poured by Mr. Zincke on the history of Egypt, but no one will venture to suggest that he has added one jot to any traveller's knowledge of Switzerland . . . There is quite enough in this little volume to arrest the attention of anybody who cares for an hour's intercourse with the mind of one who has carefully pondered some of the deepest problems which affect the well-being of his fellow-creatures."—Spectator, xlvi. 960.
